In 1883 the various institutions of Hamburg (museums, laboratories, etc.) which had been affiliated with the Akademisches und real-gymnasium (founded 1613; dissolved 1883) were transferred to the supervision of the Oberschulbehörde, a new section being established to function für die wissenschaftlichen anstalten. By law of October 11, 1901, the system of public lectures (Allgemeine vorlesungswesen) which had existed since 1906 (reorganized 1907 and 1908) was combined with the Sektion für die wissenschaftlichen anstalten in one organization, called Wissenschaftliche anstalten des staates Hamburg.

In 1919 the above educational system was superseded by the Universität Hamburg.

Founded 1529, and known in its earliest years as Bibliotheca scholae Sti. Johannis, or Bibliotheca Sti. Johannis, or Bibliotheca Joannea; it belonged first to the Johanneum and the Akademisches und real-gymnasium, and under the latter it developed into the Stadtbibliothek. Upon the dissolution of the Akademisches gymnasium in 1883 it passed to the control of the Hamburgische oberschulbehörde, Sektion für die wissenschaftlichen anstalten, and remained in that relation until the establishment of the Universität Hamburg in 1919, when it became affiliated with the university under the name of Staats- und universitäts-bibliothek.
